

EAP and Disability Management

Disability costs have the potential to be a significant drain on your business, not just through the direct cost of disability but also the indirect costs related to productivity loss. What can we do? Karen Seward, senior vice president, business development and marketing at Shepell•fgi will discuss how to leverage your EAP in the efforts to mitigate disability costs and assist your employees in the challenges they face in the return-to-work process.

Speaker

Karen Seward, Senior Vice President, Business Development and Marketing, Shepell•fgi, Toronto

As senior vice president, business development and marketing at Shepell•fgi, Ms. Seward leads the development of innovative health management products and prevention tools that promote workplace health and support employees' well-being and their employers' business productivity needs. She was named a Who's Who In Workplace Health by Working Well magazine and Rogers Media in 2008. Ms. Seward is a member of the Conference Board of Canada. Featured as a speaker at numerous conferences and seminars, she has published articles in periodicals including Benefits Canada and Benefits & Pensions Monitor, and often appears in national media to speak on workplace health and productivity issues. Ms. Seward holds a B.A. degree from the University of Toronto and is noted for her unique approach in treating health in the workplace as a business issue, bringing quantitative figures to show how an investment in a healthy workplace drives productivity and offsets disability costs to a company's bottom line.
