Joe Connolly is the CEO and co-founder of Visana Health, a virtual care solution providing comprehensive, evidence-based care for women's health conditions. Inspired by his mother's 25-year battle with undiagnosed endometriosis and fibroids, Joe founded Visana to transform the broken health care system for women by creating a care model that focuses on treating chronic gynecological conditions with empathy, precision, and impact. Joe's expertise includes health care strategy and addressing inequities in women's health. Previously, he led a medical device strategy and innovation team that developed a patient-focused innovation methodology, partnering with multiple top-tier health systems in the United States and Europe to implement a digital health solution that improves patient outcomes and reduce costs. Joe frequently speaks at health care conferences, sharing insights on improving access, reducing costs, and driving better outcomes through virtual value-based care. He holds a master's degree in biomedical engineering from Duke University.
